MANAGER MEGALINER WARREN

Money Question. No. 3.

A Mecklenburg Democrat on the Editors of the Dispatch: We see, then, how trifling is this inci-dental benefit arising from an inconvertidental benefit arising from an inconverti-ble currency, when it pre-supposes an equal that which gives value to money is a Govloss to a far greater number. In order to enjoy this boasted, benefit the country must be the debtor nation and exchange against it; if so, then the benefit pre-supposes a far greater loss. If exchange with England is against America, bills on the former are at a premium; on the latter at a stant meous, and infallible reliefs for all the discount; and America could send gold to Europe and buy up notes against America at a discount; but that would be like a man shaving his own paper, which shows that his credit is gone, or soon will be. alas! so liberally swallowed or otherwise it appears undeniable, then, that inconvertible paper does not save the individual debtor from sacrifice of property to pay loreign debt, but increases that sacrifice; but it is said, on the other hand, that the convertible system of draining the paper at fering relief to bodily ills, is too great to be the rate of 3 or 6 for every 1 of gold withdrawn contracts at a beavier rate. The fall, says Mr. Winder, is more sudden. more extreme; it is not a descent by steps. ber thus seeking relief, how few find it? by gentle graduations, but a crash, and Let humanity, still suffering and afflicted, when completed leaves the country without a cent. Now let us sec: Suppose a bank with $60,000 in specie issues $360,000 of deal in patent medicines. There are agrinotes. Suppose it loses one tenth of its cultural quacks—some offering to restore specie ($6,000), it will call in one tenth of our worn-out lands with borus fertilizers its notes ($26,000). There is a larger others trusting to nature alone to make amount, but not a larger proportion, of paper withdrawn than of specie. Hence the fall is as gradual as if it was specie withdrawn from circulation instead of paper. But you say the volume of currency ought making them ruinous only to the purchasnot to be changed gradually or suddenly; ers. But the worst of all, perhaps, are it ought to be unchangeable. Fou see that the financial quacks, with their ready gradually as if it were all specie. Why, men to make something and do something invariable in volume. How do you propose to make it invariable? You cannot do must be an easier and a quicker propaper. You must make it inconvertible ment can create money by putting its stamp from circulation except by law; while, after once it is issued, it needs no law to declare it invariable in volume until so changed. If it had been specie, debis due abroad might have drawn some of it out of the ble in nothing! As this proposed ready reble in nothing! As this proposed ready relief to the impecunious will be valueless in the same propertion of it. Unless you prevent the accumulation of foreign debt, how can you confine at shome the money that ought to go abroad to pay that debt? If the money cannot go out itself, will it not go abroad in the shape of property to pay the debt? If a man cannot pay his foreign debt with money, he must buy cotton or tobacco to send abroad to pay it. That will raise the price of cotton, &c., here, and lessen the profits of the shipper, and act as a duty on exports and a bounty on imports, because it increases the exports and makes exchange more abandant, and therefore cheaper. So it seems there is a point becheaper. So it seems there is a point beyond which Mr. Winder's rule about the premium acting as a bounty on exports and a duty on imports is reversed. It is where the price of produce here is so high that it cannot be experted at a profit, and would not be sent except by those who had foreign debts and must send produce, even at a less, to save the premium on gold. The premium on gold attendant on inconwider and a juster view, it is an evil almost unmitigated, which is to be endured with patience and resignation while it is unawoidable, but deliverance from which should be earnestly sought and labored for, that it is only the existence of foreign debt convertible paper, and that this evil is only shifted in position—not escaped—by having inconvertible paper. .In the one case propremium on gold one is a less in volume, the greater I am not sufficiently informed in or who are groaning under loads of unthe other in value. Which of these evils is the matter to determine. My opinion is, from my observation, that the two cases differ like an acute and a chronic disease—the one kills the patient or itself very-speedily; the other is not apt to kall, but establishes itself as a fixture, and is worse itself than death; and it never, like the other, cures itself. It is fair, when you talk of the ills of one system, to offset them by those of the other. This is negative sort of argument, only to be resorted to when there is only a choice of evils. But I take higher ground. I advocate convertible paper on its own merits as the bestthe beau ideal of a currency. I reject an inconvertible paper that is permanently so, and of choice, not necessity, as a mere chi-mera, a Utopian vision, a socialistic theory, a sort of cooperation, mutual-association scheme on a larger scale, that can never be reduced to practice; for it ignores the na- say so is all that is necessary no make good security from pecuniary embaurassment for individuals or nations is to be cautious of hundred dollars per capita, the going in debt. ## Ready Reliefs.

But notwithstanding all the pills, potions, lotions, poultices, ointments, tinctures, extracts, bitters, &c., &c., so liberally offered to the afflicted, and used by the too credulous, men continue to suffer and die. ## Getting Down to Solid Bottom. [Chicago Journal]

"From and after to-day," remarked a leading and very intelligent Chicago manufacturer this morning, "we will have better times. The doing away with the bankrupt law will be worth everything to the trade and industry of the country-it will restore confidence in trade immediately. And view of it taken by Mr. Winder, a doubtful then," he continued, "the Greenbackers benefit, since it cuts both ways; while, in a of huncombe, you will see that, taken in connection with the expiration of the bankrupt law, the resumption of specie-payments by the Government mext New-Year's day will set us well on our feet again, as nothing else could." "But," we remarked, "even proper terms. I have endeavored to show many of the merchants and other business-men seem to think that we ought that causes the danger apprehended from not yet to resume specie-payments; that some further legislation is needed by Congress." "Yes," he replied, "I know a few of them talk like that, but the bankrupt law being out of the way, every of the carrency; in the other the whole country suffers by its depreciation; by the premium on gold on the carrency in the other the whole bottom. Greenback inflation wouldn't help anybody, and the men who have been smothered with overloads of debt, profitable real estate, will see pretty soon that the best thing for them, as well as the rest of us, will be to come down to the solid bottom rock and begin to:rebuild upward from a firm foundation below. It's the only way for us-the only way in which we can restore our business prosperity permanently. Inflation would in time only burst those of us who have survived the trouble, and the same ducks of now would be just as lame then, and probably even worse off. We have seen the worst of our troubles; all we ask is that the politicians and Congress will let the thing alone." These are the words of an experienced man, whose cool and intelligent judgment in matters of practical trade and finance are entitled to general respect.
